HONGKONG, APRIL 12TH, 1878.

One of the most important questions that should immediately engage the attention of the Chinese Government is the process of denaturalization which has been going on through the length and breadth of the Empire for so many centuries. The Chinese are comparatively little acquainted with any province, and in the southern provinces nothing but wood and charcoal are consumed. There is a great and continual demand for firewood, and its supply affords a maintenance to thousands of persons. But, unfortunately for the country, while the demand goes on increasing the supply is steadily decreasing. The natives take no thought for the morrow, but remorselessly cut down the trees and never dream of planting others in their places. The stumps become pollards, and these are in turn victims of the axe. Meanwhile another and more startling growth springs up from the cones which have fallen and taken root. These are also cut down or robbed of their branches and never attain any size. The result is that at the present moment the hillsides of South China are bare and furrowed by the summer torrents, which wash away the surface soil, and leave them arid and unproductive. Here and there a small forest of stunted trees is to be seen, but it is only near the villages that any large trees are to be found. It is absurd to suppose that trees would not grow on these hills because of their altitude and exposure. The Chinese pine will flourish in almost any soil if planted thickly enough to allow of the trees protecting one another from the force of the wind. The effect of this denudation of the trees is most disastrous on the climate, causing it to be hotter in summer and drier in the winter; while streams once perennial become temporary torrents only causing inundation at one time and scarcity of fresh water at another.

Looking at the frightful condition of affairs in North China owing to the increasing denudation of the country, it is time that the Government of Peking paid earnest attention to the disappearance of the forests. It will be a difficult matter to restore the country to its former fertility, but an effort should be made in this direction by planting on an enormous scale and in a scientific manner in order to arrest the denudation and escape the terrible and frequent droughts by which the northern provinces have lately been afflicted. The cost of planting would not be too serious, but this must not be weighed in the balance with the welfare of millions of people and the permanent restoration of the country to prosperity. Storms and hurricanes follow long seasons of drought, and complete the ruin that the want of rain inaugurated. The same wasteful and unscientific practice of denudation has been proceeding in India, with the same calamitous result. Ignorance of scientific laws and the want of proper regulations to ensure that for every tree hewn down another was planted has there, as in China, reduced vast tracts of country into treeless wastes. A writer signing himself "Philidius" has contributed a very able article on "Famines and Floods in India" to "Macmillan's Magazine" for January, in which he shows very clearly the connection between denudation and drought, floods, and cyclones.

"Philidius" does not hesitate to charge the denudation of the Carnatic with the dreadful famines which have desolated that country, and we may safely ascribe to the same cause the famines which have during the last two years raged in the North of China. "Philidius" thus describes the action of forests in arresting the rainfall:—

"As forests are cut down, the springs which flow from them, and consequently the water courses which are fed by those, diminish in number, continuity and volume. Observations in all parts of the world have established the fact that the diminution of flowing water has invariably followed the destruction of forests. Nor has the removal of woods a less certain or less marked effect upon the character of floods both in rivers and in torrents. The surface of the earth (says Mr. Maule) in his book 'The Earth as modified by Human Action' can never in its natural condition pour forth such deluges of water as flow from cultivated soil, since vegetable mould not only absorbs nearly twice its own weight of water, but when saturated gives off moisture to the atmosphere earth below. The bed of rivers, moreover, that have not been converted into regular conduits for water, are a very considerable proportion of rain, while
